ment of the German lines to positions better adapted to defense and at the same time was given an explanation of the withdrawal,

Forts Douaumont and Vaux, it was alleged, formed such a material ele-ment in the defense of Verdun as long as they remained with unimpaired armament in French hands that they had to be put out of action in order to cripple the fortress and once this was accomplished the ruins of the forts, with the armamen's removed possessed no such importance to the Germans and served chiefly as tar-gets for the French artillery. Now that Fort Donaumont had bassed again into French possession, Fort Vaux no longer, in the opinion of the German leaders, justified the heavy sacrifices necessary to retain the ground about the fort, which is ill-adapted to defense against attacks from the south and west. Fort Vaux was therefore abandoned and the Ger-man lines retired to positions less ex-
